IV Handling Men Through Organization JOHN D. RYAN, formerly President of the Amalgamated Copper Company, and now in charge of aircraft production for the United States Army, is a great believer in averages. He has built up his success in business by strictly observing this law in handling men. He believes that a hundred men will average up pretty well with any other group of the same number picked at random anywhere else. In each such group you will find some very good men, some very poor ones, and a large number of average ones. Mr. Ryan has built up a great many rundown organizations, simply by changing men around until he has each one fitted into his proper place. He does not believe in firing the whole gang tpjMo and getting a new one, because the new gang on the average is...
