A patient who has once had diabetes should have his urine examined every few weeks. The glycosuria always precedes the general symptoms of the disease, and these general symptoms can generally be forestalled by proper treatment employed as soon as sugar makes its appearance in the urine. 8. As the disease returns, either from imprudences in diet or from other causes, the successive recurrences present greater and greater difficulties in the way of treatment. OPIUM AND BELLADONNA IN DIABETES MELLITUS. M. Villemin, Prof, of Med. Military Hosp., Val de Grace, reports the case of a young artilleryman of strong constitution, who was admitted with acute diabetes with all its usual symptoms, consisting of a polyuria of fourteen litres a day, and discharging eight hundred and forty-one grammes of glucose in the same period. The usual treatment was at once commenced by ordering abstinence from sugar, etc., and giving meat diet with the gluten bread, etc.; but, a week having passed without any improvement, Dr. Villemin thought of a case of diabetes insipidus that he had seen cured with belladonna and opium, and began to try it in this man. He feared at first that he might provoke accumulation of glucose in the system by putting a check on the urinary secretion by this medication. But, however, he began by giving ten centigrammes of extract of belladonna and five centigrammes of opium extract per day; and seven days...
