Excerpt: .said, the height of the water in the boiler, and after that to get down and examine the ash-pan to know whether the dampers are operative, examine the front-end, see that the slide is in the cinder shute and note whether the smoke-box door is bolted up tight in order that no air may get in to destroy the vacuum created by the exhaust steam in the front end of the engine; we tell the engineer to also encourage the fireman to do that. We tell the fireman in drifting down the grades with his engine, to close his dampers and regulate his fire at the top of the grade, then close the dampers to prevent the air getting in around the fuel on the grates. If the air gets to the bed of fuel on the grates, of course, it will burn it...
